Prospect Terrace was a summer boarding house located on what is now the East of campus just in front of Bermin Art Museum. It was built in the 1850's and was owned in the later years by Dr. James Palmer, who attempted to sell it and the adjoining land to the college in 1872 before the board of directors decided to build the East Wing on Freeland Hall (Derr Hall). Prospect Terrace offered board to women for $4 per week, including heat and light. It burned in 1900.

Freeland Hall was the original building of Freeland Seminary founded in 1848 by Abraham Hunsicker. Freeland Seminary along with 7 acres and 139 perches of land were purchased for $20,000 in January 1869. Stine Hall, a dormitory on the North side, was erected in 1856 and Derr on the East was built in 1872. Derr was added after UC was founded in 1869. In 1910 a new portico was added. Freeland Hall remained the center of campus life until it was razed in 1968 to make space for the new Myrin Library.
The original Olevian Hall, purchased in 1891 as the "Ladies Boarding Hall," was the first women's dormitory. It was moved in 1931 to make room for Pfahler Hall.

The first building to be built after Ursinus College opened in 1869, was Bomberger Hall. It was named after Dr. John Henry Augustus Bomberger (1817-90), who was the founder of Ursinus College and its first President from 1870-1890. Bomberger Hall opened in 1892 at a cost of $62,000 to make.

The Field House, built in 1909, housed shower and locker facilities or the athletic squads and an office for the coach.

"Zachariah Baer (1534-83) was one of the most learned theologians and teachers of his time, in the second generation of the German and Swiss reformers, after Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and Zwingli. A native of Breslau in eastern Germany, he entered the University of Wittenberg at the age of sixteen. There, as was the custom among scholars, he Latinized his name to Zacharias Ursinus .... He was one of the most learned theologians and teachers of his time, in the second generation of German and Swiss reformers, after Luther, Melanchthon, Calvin, and Zwingli. This name was proposed by Dr. Bomberger and was intended to declare the Reformed orthodoxy of the College."

Quoted from Ursinus College: A History of its First Hundred Years by Calvin C. Yost

When the shades of evening gather,
Whether it is for Halloween, or just to entertain their friends, one of the favorite pass times of UC students is dressing up. No matter the occasion, this event always results in lots of laughs and many times embarrassing pictures.

In 1949, freshman girls were not permitted to wear make-up, jewelry other than watches or engagement rings, nor finger polish.

In the handbook for the 1941-1942 school year, it states that "the friendliest tradition at Ursinus College is saying "Hello!" ... an Ursinus student is never passed without a greeting."

In the mid 1970's dormitories were made coed. Up until this point, students were forbidden to entertain those of the opposite sex in their dormitory rooms.

In 1872, students were required to return to their rooms immediately after breakfast to devote an hour to studying.

Until the removal of Freeland Hall, the privilege of sitting on the front steps was reserved for upper classmen only.

In 1891 - "the average age of the class is 21 3/4 years. The average height is 5 feet, 6 inches, the tallest member overlooking us from an elevation of 5 feet 8 3/4 inches, while the shortest smiles up at the rest from a height of 5 feet. The average weight is 132 pounds, the extremes being 105 and 154" (Ursinus College: A History of its First Hundred Years, page 41).
Freeland Hall had two dining rooms, an upper and a lower, where students were served by fellow classmates who worked as waiters.

In the middle 1900s, dancing was not permitted in any of the college buildings, except on occasions specified by the President of the college.

In 1962, beds were required to be made by 10 am.

Be Thankful You Were Not a Freshman in 1926...

Ursinus College has an extensive collection of outdoor artwork. The various artists and art are all quite distinct. The artists are from many different countries and the art is composed of many different media. However, all of the art on UC’s campus was designed for the same task...to provoke thought and engage viewers. Ursinus has the Bermans to thank for this awe-inspiring collection. Most of the pieces found around campus were donated by Philip and Muriel Berman. Their first contribution was made in 1980 and since that time, the collection has grown. President John Strassburger feels that “Outdoor sculpture invites us to look and to think about art, about the landscape, and ultimately, about the relationship between art, nature, and ourselves.”
Everyone knows what it is like to be a freshman - adjusting to the classes, sharing with roommates, getting lost and finding your way. But it also means meeting the people who will soon become your closest friends, having your first all-nighter (to finish the paper you forgot about, or just because there aren’t enough daylight hours to spend with your friends), and beginning the first year of what are about to be the four best years of your life so far. The newest addition to the Ursinus family is the largest class that has ever enrolled here. Whether in the classroom, or hanging out on the weekends, the class of 2007 has already proved that they know what Ursinus is all about.

CIE classes discuss what it means to be human and many other thought-provoking questions as well as discussing written works such as The Epic of Gilgamesh and Dante’s Inferno.

Move In Day!

Some students bring all of their belongings to college when they move in.

This son and dad duo attempt to make as little possible trips up to the third floor of Reimert by carrying as much stuff as possible.

On August 24, 2003, students were officially allowed to move in to their dorm rooms. For the students who entered on this day, it was not a new process for them. The entire day is spent unpacking belongings and rearranging rooms so that they look perfect. Everyone helps out with the process, including younger siblings. Throughout the day, everyone was filled with smiles for those they have not seen all summer and sadness for the families and loved ones they are leaving behind. Although students are eager to move in and be back at Ursinus College, they are not so eager to begin classes the next day.

"Ok, so this is how you correctly use a pipette." (Biology 111 lab)

Whether you were ready or not, the 2003-2004 school year got underway on Monday, August 25th. Classes started bright and early with anxious freshmen and many seniors wishing they had more time before the "real world."

The sophomores were glad they were no longer freshmen and the juniors were eager to put another year under their belts.

Regardless of what year they are in, everyone is ready for another year of endless reading, papers and late nights in the library. Let's not forget all the fun and crazy times with friends that will be mixed in there. We'll all put together the right combination of work and play to make a successful year!

The summer adventures of Ursinus students vary greatly depending on one’s major and career goals. Some people spend their summer taking classes in the hopes of advancing themselves credit-wise. The courses that people take range from Spanish to marine biology, which is a program that Ursinus runs during the summer to the Marine Biological Laboratory in Woods Hole, Massachusetts. Others apply for internships in many different fields. Those on internship are hoping to bolster both their resume and their work experience so that they can be a better applicant for a future job or graduate/professional education. Ursinus is the home of a unique program, Summer Fellows, which allows students to research a project which they find interesting. In the summer of 2003, the projects varied from economics to botany to internet dating. Students from Ursinus also travel abroad during the summer to places such as Germany and France in the hopes of increasing the fluency in another language and researching topics of interest. Although the campus of UC remains mostly empty over the summer, the Ursinus student body remains active and is constantly in pursuit of wisdom and excellence.

It's All In the UC Family

Ursinus celebrated its annual Family Day September 20th, 2003. Relatives poured in from near and far for a chance to see the Ursinus community in action. Parents took this opportunity to tour the college campus and see how we live everyday. Students presented their research in Pfahler Hall for all campus visitors. Later, friends and family packed the football stands, cheered on women’s field hockey, and experienced an intense rugby game. The day was completed with beautiful weather -- perfect for a picnic outside.

Freshman Ed Butkovitz shows his family around the UC campus and then stops to take a break for a picnic lunch on the lawn. Jen Katz, Kim Dalosisio, Meghan Jarret, and Heather Trefriger of Sigma Sigma Sigma devote their Saturday to selling roses for charity.

Hundreds of people sit outside and enjoy the weather, lunch, and spending time with their families.

Even the littlest brothers and sisters had a great day with games and prizes provided by the college.
These students do homework and relax outside of BWC. Before the weather gets cold, many students take advantage of the open space that the college has to do their homework.

Free Time...

When they aren't at class or working hard on assignments and projects, the student body finds that Ursinus provides many things to do during their free time.

By day they are seen relaxing with friends in their rooms or around campus, going to sporting events or playing intramurals, or participating in the many clubs and activities offered by Ursinus College.

or shine, homecoming is always an exciting day for the Ursinus Campus. While many students enjoyed the football game, others enjoyed the numerous other athletic events occurring throughout the day. Everyone however, made sure they were present for the much anticipated crowning of the Ursinus College king and queen. In addition to these activities there were also many others for the students to participate in. Homecoming was also a day when hundreds of alumni came back and participated in the festivities with current students.
What better way to start out the rushing season than with Homecoming Festivities? Alumni and present Greeks alike got together to show the rushes what it means to be part of a brother/sisterhood. Above: Michelle Henry gives expert tips to the student trainers.
The college was even weirder socially, mostly because of strict segregation of the genders in dorms (and, seemingly, everywhere else). Women lived in the quad, men in Reimert or BWC, and the Main Street houses were single-sex as well. Men and women were not allowed to enter each other's dorms except at strictly regulated times: for example, women could go into Reimert every other Saturday from 1 p.m. to 1 a.m. College students then were as interested in the opposite sex as they are now, so you can imagine how well these policies worked. I had a male friend with whom I often studied in Reimert, and I was not alone. The men had rigged up a large siren on the roof of Reimert and took turns manning the lookout station in the evenings. If the Dean of Men approached the building from the front, the siren would wail, and women would pour out of the windows in the back. Once a classmate of mine was visiting her boyfriend on the third floor and found herself too high up to jump out and too late to scurry down when the siren blew. She ended up hiding in her boyfriend's bag of dirty laundry while the Dean stopped to chat with him and his suite mates about the upcoming football season.

Life was a bit different in the women's dorms, which were kept locked and so had less frequent intruders of the "wrong" gender. There, ladylike behavior was enforced. The Dean of Women posted a sign over the bathtubs that read "An optimist cleans the tub after she has used it; a pessimist, before she has used it; but a lady cleans it both before and after." Most of us just took showers.

One other point of interest: in the fall of my senior year, Bruce Springsteen and his band played in Wismer Cafeteria. It didn't matter much at the time. He wasn't famous, and I didn't even go because I was living off campus that fall, but it is cool now to have a picture of the Boss in my yearbook!

"A good teacher is like a candle -

The major thing that I remember about my years at Ursinus was that it was GREAT to be an RA on duty Thursday or Friday night because NBC had the greatest line-up! Groups of us would hang out in each other's rooms with food and soda to watch Cosby - Family Ties - Cheers - Night Court and LA Law on Thursday nights and Crime Story - Miami Vice - Music Videos (we didn't have cable access back then) on Friday nights.

I also remember all-night cram sessions for finals in the old student union, which is now the Berman Museum. We would go to 7-Eleven (which is now the police department on 5th and Main) and load up on Super Big Gulp of Mountain Dew and then study and bounce off the walls until it was time to take our finals. What was really great about it was that we were all in different majors - economics, bio, history, and communications. Of course, in retrospect, maybe we would have gotten better grades if we had studied with other people in our majors...
Back in the day...

This is what four teachers had to say about their experiences at Ursinus when they were in college.

Fifty years ago I was completing my sophomore year at Ursinus. Coming back to campus in the first decade of the new century was a much different experience than it had been in the 60's. The world has changed dramatically. President John Kennedy was assassinated while I was a student here and I still remember walking across the lawn in front of Bomberger Hall being told by advisor of the shooting. That was a defining moment of the decade.

The same period also saw vast changes at UC. Of course there are the obvious ones like new physical facilities, a larger faculty, many new course offerings and activities and a larger and more diverse student body. Wismer Hall opened in 1965 and Freeland Hall was still in use. When I was a student, the Political Science department consisted of only three professors compared to our Politics and International Relations department today with seven professors. There are many more foreign students today.

Beyond these outward and visible signs of change, there have been many less obvious changes. Many of those are best lected in the knowledge, background, and attitudes of the student body. They are far more outward looking than they were in my day. Study overseas was rare then. When a classmate decided to spend the summer studying in Switzerland, it was a really big deal. Now we have many students spending semesters abroad. The emphasis on independent study is also w. In the 60's there were fewer opportunities to develop as individuals and to express themselves. Today's graduates have a much greater appreciation and understanding of the world in which we live. Our vision is more international.

The changes in the way we think and our aspirations will continue to expand and it is that which will endure far beyond the physical changes. The brick and mortar are only tools in the business of learning. Our horizons have expanded and as they expand, our ability.
Teaching is leaving a vestige of oneself in the development of another. And surely the student is a bank where we can deposit our most precious treasures.

I promised someone dear to me named Peachie that I would graduate from college, although she couldn’t reach me. Mentally, and spiritually times could get hard, to have such a close mentor gone, up with the angels, away so far....but persistence was a necessity, couldn’t let life changes get the best of me. With courage to continue, and success only on my menu, I’ve finally made it, through the pain and strife, to finish this chapter and start a new page in life.

To the Class of 2004,

Congratulations on a job well done! Your fine achievements continue to make Ursinus College an institution that fosters excellence, engenders understanding and respect, and nurtures responsibility. I have enjoyed getting to know you and I wish you the best of luck as you continue your journeys through life. I would also like to applaud the 2004 Ruby Staff for producing another handsome yearbook.

Sincerely,
John Strassburger
Rachel,

Since we were little, I have looked up to you and I continue to admire the person you are today. I am so proud to have you as my sister. Thanks for always being there for me, for giving me great advice and for being my outlet when I felt the need to vent. "Having a sister is like having a best friend you can’t get rid of. You know whatever you do, they’ll still be there.” I love you!

"Harry" (a.k.a. Katie)

Rachel,

We are so proud of the person you have become and what you have accomplished. Always keep God first in your life as your journey continues. We love you.

Over the past four years a great deal of change has occurred in our lives. Some for the better, some not.

The change that I’m most proud of is the change in you. You entered Ursinus as a wide-eyed freshman, away from home and unsure what the future would bring. What a difference four years made. Look at you now! You handled the challenge of college life with hard work and determination. You’re leaving Ursinus as a very focused, motivated and caring person.

You are ready for the next chapter in life’s journey. Mom would have been so proud of you. I am so proud of you. Good luck.

I Love You,
Dad
Dear Marie,

You are a shining example of what a daughter is.
Loving and compassionate
Sensitive and intelligent
Determined and independent

As you continue to grow, always have dreams and always try to make them a reality.

Love Always,
Mom and Dad
On the day you were born we realized that you would always be full of surprises and would be determined to achieve your goals. Each day since, we have been amazed by your strength and extremely proud of your successes.

Congratulations on all of your accomplishments at Ursinus College. We love you!

Who'd of thought...

Our little girl would reach for the stars
And touch the sky
Surpass our dreams, by and by

She would be watched by angels
From above
Who watch proudly and send their love

Today her journey is only
Half way through,
Four more years she will start anew...

THE BEST YOU CAN

I do the very best I know how – the very best I can; and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won’t amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference.

President Abraham Lincoln, quoted in Carpenter,
SIX MONTHS AT THE WHITE HOUSE, 1867.

Sean,

We are so very proud of you in many ways, but especially because you have always strived to do your best.

Good luck in law school!

We love you,

You went through high school with all but one A,
In fall to Ursinus you went away.
With a lot of hard work and a little bit of fun,
Finally your Freshman year was done.
Physics Class, Weis, and so on,
Before we knew it, the summer was gone.
Off you went to handle year two,
I know you thought you would never get through.
Somehow you made it without losing your mind,
Moved on to NIST and left Weis behind.
Kaplan Class, school, there was no rest,
A new car from mom, you passed the test.
More classes, work, MCAT as well,
You had experience the pre-med's Hell.
Med School applications and year 4,
Guess what Kid, there will be a lot more.
This poem has turned out kind of nice,
So I will end it with a piece of advice.
Work for tomorrow, As hard as you can today,
Learn from the past and all will go your way.
Best wishes and good luck to you Salita.
From Mom, Dad, Kush, Baby, and Valita!
